Many Snowbirds Die
Of Unknown Malaria

Hundreds Were Found Aboard
Terminal Elevator At Christchurch

Hundreds of snow birds stricken from some unidentified trouble died around the Christchurch elevator, according to Alan Nelson, naturalist, and Walter in Christchurch, arrived at the St. Matthews, on the southwest mainland.

It is thought that the snow birds might have gorged themselves on frozen wheat lying around the elevator. The fact that no dead birds were found in other parts of the range led to this belief.

The sticky weather in The Pacific has been hard on the wild ducks, freezing of the water has prevented the ducks from finding sufficient food. Hunters report many of the ducks are thin and are badly off.

There was much speculation as to the cause of the trouble this fall. In spite of the freezing of the little lakes they seemed likely to depart for the south.
